Script (Announcement)	Good evening, everyone. This is a reminder about Grandfather's eightieth birthday celebration this weekend. The dinner, originally booked for Saturday, has been moved to Sunday instead, because more relatives from Malaysia can only arrive on Sunday. Please arrive at the restaurant half an hour earlier than usual, at six o'clock, so we can take a big family photo before dinner starts. The set menu costs thirty-eight dollars per person, which already includes a three-dollar discount for every child below twelve. The relative organising the event is Auntie Shirley — that is spelled S, H, I, R, L, E, Y. Please confirm your attendance with her by Friday.

Script (Story)	Here is a short story. Listen carefully, then answer the questions. At Grandfather's birthday dinner, Ryan was asked to give a short speech. He had prepared notes on a piece of paper, but could not find it in his pocket when his turn came. Panicking, he almost ran to the car to search for it, but his sister reminded him that he had practised the speech so many times that he could probably remember most of it. Taking a deep breath, Ryan stood up and gave the speech from memory, forgetting only one small joke he had planned to include. Everyone clapped warmly, and Grandfather said it was the best gift he could have asked for.
