Clearing the Corridor

Jun Wei lived in a block of HDB flats in Bedok. Every day after school, he noticed old newspapers and empty tins piling up along the corridor outside his flat, left there by residents who forgot to throw them away.

One Saturday morning, Jun Wei decided to do something about it. He borrowed a trolley from the void deck and went from door to door, collecting old newspapers and tins from neighbours who wished to recycle.

His neighbour, Madam Ong, was delighted to see him. She had been meaning to clear out a stack of old magazines, but her bad back made it difficult to carry them downstairs. Jun Wei happily carried the heavy stack for her.

By noon, the trolley was overflowing, and Jun Wei felt exhausted. Still, he pushed it all the way to the recycling bin near the playground and sorted the items carefully into paper and metal.

The Science Fair Mishap

Aisha had been looking forward to the school's Science Fair for weeks. She and her project partner, Farid, had built a small model volcano that could “erupt” using baking soda and vinegar.

On the morning of the fair, Aisha rushed to school with the volcano model balanced carefully on a tray. Just as she reached the school gate, she tripped over an uneven tile and the model crashed to the ground, breaking into several pieces.

Aisha felt her heart sink. She wanted to cry, but there was no time. Farid, who had just arrived, knelt down immediately and began gathering the broken pieces without saying a word of blame.

Together, they hurried to the Art room and borrowed some glue and cardboard from Mr Rajoo, the art teacher. Working quickly, they managed to patch the volcano back
