The Clean-Up Challenge

Every class in the school was assigned a different part of the neighbourhood to clean up as part of the annual 'Clean and Green' campaign. Haikal's class was assigned the stretch of park connector behind their housing estate.

At first, many pupils grumbled about picking up other people's litter under the hot sun. Their form teacher, Mdm Yusof, reminded them that a cleaner neighbourhood benefited everyone, including themselves.

Halfway through the clean-up, the class discovered an unusually large pile of rubbish dumped behind some bushes, far more than they could carry in their small bags. Haikal suggested they split into two groups: one to keep collecting smaller litter, and another to fetch extra bags from the community centre.

By working in this way, the class finished clearing the entire stretch before the two-hour deadline, earning praise from the grassroots volunteers supervising the event.

On the bus back to school, Haikal realised that the pupils who had grumbled loudest at the start were now the proudest of how much they had achieved together.

The Science Project Blackout

Shu Hui and her project partner, Timothy, had spent weeks building a working model of a simple electrical circuit for the school's Science Fair, complete with a tiny light bulb that lit up when a switch was pressed.

On the morning of the fair, as they were setting up their display table, Timothy accidentally knocked over a cup of water, soaking the circuit board and short-circuiting the whole model.

Shu Hui felt a wave of panic, since the judges were due to arrive within the hour and their only working model was now ruined. Timothy quickly dried what he could with tissue paper while Shu Hui ran to borrow spare wires and a battery from another class's leftover supplies.

Working together under pressure, the pair rebuilt a simpler version of the circuit just in time, though it lacked some of the original decorations they had planned. When the judges arrived, Shu Hui and Timothy explained clearly how the circuit worked, and the judges seemed impressed by their calm explanation despite the mishap.

Later, their teacher told them that although their model was not as polished as some others, their teamwork under pressure was exactly the kind of problem-solving the Science Fair hoped to encourage.
